

I am not sure that any business should be limited in the scope of their service area, so I wouldn't object if a company were allowed to own a broadcast property in every market in the nation, but this can only happen in conjunction with an increase in the number of broadcast licenses available, so all localities have some locally owned licenses, too.

The system used by the FCC in gathering information has the appearance that the FCC has been captured by the industry that it is supposed to regulate. Let's hope that you don't go off the rails as the SEC did.
